

maturity, your majesty may with safety apply a discretionary medicine.

What remains to me, Great Sir, is humbly to implore your majesty's acceptance of a sacrifice which this day I am commissioned to offer. It is, Great Sir, the hearts and hands of this adoring croud, the lives and fortunes of all these the ancient inhabitants of your majesty's most loyal town of Drogheda. That their blood is sincere and proof against the scurvy of rebellion; witness those walls; witness the pavements consecrated by the gore of their everfaithful progenitors.

We will conclude, Great Sir, with a short prayer, and it is not that your majesty either protect us in, or restore us to our lost property, our churches, or our benefices; no, our loyalty is so seraphick that it rejects all those drossy allays of self interest; but it is, Sacred Sir, that heaven, whose darling we are sure you are, may grant to your most sacred Majesty, after having dashed to pieces all treasonable and traitorous associations and conspiracies, and after having soared like a sun in its full meridian o'er the heads of all your enemies, and unnaturally rebellious subjects, after having dismembered rebellion itself, that infernal bydra, and driven it into its hellish mansions, where we were sure it took its first breath, a happy, a speedy, a safe, and a glorious return to your ancient Imperial Throne; in success, a Cæsar; in conquest, an Alexander; and a Constantine in religion.

N. B. The aforementioned Hen. Dowdall now stands outlawed for the Rebellion of 88, and is alive, and dwelling at Acaru, in the co. of Meath, near Drogheda.

Note, Also, a supplement will soon be published, giving an account of the behaviour of a certain sort of people, in the late troubles of 1688, and 90. Particularly in the town of Drogheda: occasioned by a most daring and insolent attempt in a very late proceeding.

Some Account of the Life and Writings of Doctor Peter Lombard, Roman Catholic Primate of Armagh.

THIS eminent person was the son of a respectable merchant at Waterford, where he was born about 1560. After being at home instructed in the rudiments of learning, he was sent, as was then fashionable in Ireland, to Westminster school, over which the celebrated Camden then presided. There he found the Walshes, the Nugents, O'Reilly's, Shees and others his countrymen. In that excellent seminary he discovered those shining talents for which he was afterwards so remarkably distinguished. He removed from Westminster to Oxford, and there he met many Hibernians whose names are mentioned with honour by Hollinshed and Wood. Lombard took no degree in the University, but went from thence to Lovain, where after passing through his courses of philosophy and divinity, he received the degree of Doctor, and was made Provost of the Cathedral Church of Cambay.

In 1614, he was personally noticed by king James, in his speech from the throne, as one of those who disturbed his government. He was then archbishop of Armagh, having been appointed thereto by Pope Paul V. by whom he was first made Assessor and after President of the congregation de Auxiliis at Rome, where he died A. D. 1625, having the year before published the following Tract in 12mo. "Casus circa decretum Clementis Papæ VIII. de sacramentali confessione & absolutione non facienda in absentia." This is an inquiry, whether those who are dying and have not their reason should receive absolution.

Seven years after the death of Doctor Lombard, a posthumous work appeared under his name with this title: "De regno Hiberniæ, sanctorum insula, Commentarius: in quo, præter ejusdem insulæ situm, nominis originem, &c. pii conatus & res a Principe O'Neillo ad fidem fidem catholicam propagandam feliciter gestæ continentur. Lov. 1632. 4to. As a great part of this publication tended to revive antient animosities and excite new disturbances in Ireland, Secretary Windebank, the 20th Nov. 1633, writ to lord Strafforde, the lord Lieutenant, thus, "His Majesty understanding there is one Petrus Lombardus, or that calls himself so, who hath lately published a dangerous book in those parts concerning O'Neile, requires your lordship to suppress the book, and send some of the copies to my lord of Canterbury, and to call the author to account for it."

With the political part, which for the happiness of this Isle we hope may be forever buried in oblivion, we have no concern at this day, but there are some curious notices which well deserve recital.

Page 7. Of the Irish language. "Notandum quod hoc ipsum idioma sit vernaculum toti in primis Hiberniæ, tametsi cum aliquo discrimine, tum quoad dialectum, nonnihil variantem inter diversas provincias, tum quoad artificii observationes inter doctos & vulgares. Et dialecti quidem variatio ita se habere passim æstimatur, ut cum sint quatuor Hiberniæ provinciæ, penes Conactes sint et potestas rectæ prononciationis & phraseos vera proprietas. Penes Momonienses potestas sine proprietate; penes Ultones proprietas sine potestate; penes Lagenos nec potestas prononciationis, nec phraseos proprietas."

Though the Irish is generally spoken by the lowest rank in society, yet its enunciation widely differs among the natives of the different provinces. Where they were least improved, as in Connaught, there their prononciation and phraseology were most correct. The Ultonians had the phraseology but not the enunciation: But the people of Munster and Leinster, having their tongue corrupted by the inundation of foreigners, deviated most from the true idiom of the Irish language. As this language was very little cultivated or polished by men of letters, it is no wonder that it fell from its original structure into various anomalies, and that the speakers adopted corruptions without examination.

Molloy, in the 4th chapter of his curious Irish grammar, shows that the use of the letter H was sufficient to produce different dialects in Irish, to say nothing of Ellipsis, which was confined to the beginning of words, as Merision was to their middle and end, and suppression. As the royal Irish Academy have offered a præmium for an investigation of the Irish language, we will not obtrude our remarks, or anticipate what, no doubt, will be more scientifically advanced.

Page 11. "Giraldini—ex Britannia huc venerunt, origine vero sunt Itali, nempe vetustissimi & nobilissimi Florentini." That the princely house of Fitz-Gerald came from Florence is a very antient tradition. Alluding to this are the following pretty verses in Hollinshed, by lord Surrey.

From Tuscan came my lady's worthy race,
Fair Florence was some time her antient
seat,
The Western Isle, whose pleasant shore
doth face
Wild Camber's cliffs, did give her lively heat.
Foster'd she was with milk of Irish breast,
Her sire an earl, her dame of prince's blood,
From tender years in Britain she doth rest,
With Kinges child, where she tastes costly food.
Hunsdon did first present her to mine eine Bright is her hue, and Geraldine she hight,
Hampton me taught to wish her first for mine
And Windsor 'las! doth chase her from my sight.
Her beauty of kind, her virtues from above,
Happy is he that can obtain her love.

This beautiful Geraldine, as lord Orford in his Noble Authors ascertains, was lady Elizabeth Fitz-Gerald, second daughter of the tenth earl of Kildare. Of

Of the illustrious mother of many fair Geraldines, another Poet thus sings.

For Venuses the Trojan ne'er
Was half so puzzled to declare:
Ten Queens of beauty sure I see!
Yet sure the true is Emily*.
Such majesty of youth and air,
Yet modest as the village fair:
Attracting all, indulging none,
Her beauty like the glorious sun,
Thron'd eminently bright above
Impartial warms the world to love.

Instructions for Etching, by the celebrated Edwards, author of the Gleanings of Natural History, &c.

IN the course of my performing the engraving or etching of the copper-plates contained in my Natural History, I received not only the instructions of my friends, but bestowed some pains to examine such authors as had wrote on the subject of etching with Aqua Fortis.

I could find little or nothing on that subject originally wrote by any author of our own country; and what was translated from those of other countries, was from authors of ancient date, wrote, I believe, before artists in that way had arrived at the perfection of knowledge they have now attained; and many of these authors seem not to have practised it themselves; for I have been led by them through many labyrinths (from which I found it difficult to extricate myself) before I attained the ready practice of etching, which I am here willing to communicate, in as short and plain terms as I can, for the benefit of many curious young gentlemen who are my friends and acquaintance.

First of all, it will be proper to say something of copper-plates.—Authors on the subject of etching, tell us how to smooth, scour, and polish them for use; which is, I believe, a thing hardly any gentleman will trouble himself about, seeing that several people, in and about London, make it their business to square and smooth plates of all sizes, for persons who want them. Examine your plates when you buy them, to see if they are perfectly free from scratches, dents or holes; and if they are bad, see that the maker mend them before you take them of him. When you are provided with a plate, the next thing to be considered is, a ground to cover it withal.

General Instructions in relation to Grounds or Varnishes, proper to lay on the Plates before they are etched.

The ingredients generally made use of for the ground or varnish, are, first, Asphaltum, called also Pitch of Judea, or Jew's Pitch: it is a pretty hard, black, pitchy, or resinous substance, commonly brought to us in large gourd shells, containing, more or less, about forty pounds, and to be had of the most eminent druggists in London. The second is Bees-wax, either white or yellow. The third is common Rosin. The fourth is Mastick, a sort of fine hard rosin in small grains. I have sometimes added a little common pitch to soften it.

Though it will be proper to vary your ground a little, according to the different times of the year you work in, for that which does very well in frosty weather, may be so soft as to stick to your fingers in summer; therefore what is used in winter must have a greater proportion of the softer materials, such as the wax and common pitch; and that which is for summer use may have more of the harder materials of the receipt, which I shall here give at a medium, as near as I can, between the two extremes.

A Receipt for a Ground or Varnish.

Asphaltum	—	1½ Ounce
Bees-wax	—	2 Ounces
Rosin	—	½ Ounce
Mastick	—	½ Ounce
Common Pitch	—	¼ Ounce.

Put all these into a new pipkin well glazed, and place it on a moderate fire,

N O T E.

ed from an oak branch, and bearing a silk tassel at its end, which hangs down the horses side, the hanging or bearing-leathers have the Harp and Imperial Crown, and the City Arms alternately; the reins are crimson silk; the tassels, toppings, roses, and ribbands are properly varied.

The main-braces and check braces are perforated and ornamented with oak, the whole mounting is plated with silver, neatly perforated and ornamented in some parts with the Imperial Crown of Ireland, and City Arms in rich Ormouli; the stars for the horses foreheads are set, the housings and saddle-cloth are crimson velvet richly laced.

The seat and pannel of the saddle are green velvet, the other parts crimson Morocco leather, edged green---the Harp and Imperial Crown of Ireland, decorated with oak branches and Shamrock leaves wrought with silver, ornament the skirts.

5th. At Millecent, Co. Kildare, Mrs. Griffith, relict of the late Richard Griffith, Esq.---This lady was not more celebrated for the brilliancy and refinement of her genius in the republic of letters, than she was admired and beloved in private life for the vivacity of her wit, and the benignity of her heart. She is regretted by a numerous acquaintance---but she is deeply lamented by those near friends and relations who had a more intimate knowledge of her worth, and who at once admired her talents, and revered her virtues.---Mrs. Griffith maintained a very high literary character for several years in England, and was justly stiled in the beautiful poem of the Female Advocates, "A second Sappho, with a purer flame." She was authoress of the letters of Frances, in the collection of original letters of Henry and Frances, and of some novels which have obtained considerable celebrity, among others The Delicate Distress, The History of Lady Barton, &c. &c. Mrs. Griffith was also a very successful dramatic writer, having produced several comedies, which were performed with uncommon applause in the London Theatres.---One of these, the School for Rakes, may be deemed an English classic, being unrivalled in elegance of diction and elevation of sentiment. Her last publication was Advice addressed to

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We are extremely sorry that we could not insert in this month's publication---"The Rights of Citizens,"---and---the "Letter from Mr. Burke to the Author:"---they shall appear in our next. And also---"The Gleaner,"---"Lavateriana,"---and---"A Translation from Anacreon."---For these favours our kind and valuable correspondent will accept our best thanks.

To our sensible and judicious correspondent Recorder, we answer, that the objects he offers to our consideration are important: and we hope, next year, to carry some of his ideas into execution.

The beautiful drawing of Moyné Abbey, and the elegant and interesting description of this venerable building, sent us by J. C. we have received with gratitude. The plate is now engraving by CLAYTON, and shall appear as soon as possible. A continuance of such correspondence will be highly acceptable.

X. Y.'s "Critique on the Tragedy of the Earl of Essex;"

Mr. Dermody's "Ode on the Misfortunes of an ingenious Mind;"

"The Coterie, an Epigram;"

"An Elegy on the Loss of Quizzing;" and

Mr. Clinche's "Greek Translation of Cato's Soliloquy;"---in our next.

Several other valuable favours are received, and shall appear in course.

We have received from Mr. James Irwin, of Limerick, an ample Illustration of Dr. Wallis's Method, confined to certain Geometric Loci; which shall appear as soon as possible.

The First Letter of the "Philosophia Juvenilis," we freely confess we do not understand: the definition given of fire, may serve as an example---"Tis a body composed of subtle and grosser particles, agitated by the subtle matter, with a rapid and universal motion."!!

☞ A very beautiful Frontispiece is engraving for our Second Volume, and will accompany the Anthologia for December: and as a List of Subscribers will be printed, those who wish to have their names inserted, will please to send them to the publishers' before the 20th of next month, or give orders to their respective bookfellers, in town or country, for that purpose.

THEATRICAL REGISTER.

Nov. 28.—Democratic Rage, and the Highland Reel.
 29.—Clandestine Marriage; lord Ogleby, Mr. King; and the Spoiled Child.
 30.—Love in a Village: Young Meadows, Mr. Kelly, and Rosetta, Mrs. Crouch: and the Deaf Lover.

We are born womens friends, not their rivals; much less their tyrants: and that strength which was given us for their defence, is abused when thereby we enslave them; and to banish from society, its sweetest charm, that part of the human species which is most proper to animate it, would render it quite insipid.

The truth of this hath been proved by the people of the east, who joining together a sense of their own weakness and a brutal passion, have regarded women as dangerous companions, against whom they must be on their guard: therefore they have enslaved that sex to avoid being enslaved by them, and have thought too much love gave them a title to misuse them. But these tyrannic masters have been the first victims of their tyrannic jealousy. Devoted to a lonely melancholy life, they have sought for tender sensations in vain, amidst their fair slaves. Sensibility, with the delicacy ever its companion, are only to be found in the reign of freedom, since they both necessarily shun a society void of those springs whence they might grow. These and such like people seek to recompence themselves for a lost sensibility and delicacy, by a brutish voluptuousness which only serves to numb their senses, and brutalize their souls.

On History and Novels.

IT has of late years been often a point of warm contention, which of the two species of writings is most conducive to form the mind, and to give it a just idea of men and things—history, or well-written novels.

On the side of history, the arguments are very strong. When a man peruses the common reports of the day, though expressed in language wherein the embellishments of style are out of the question, and little more is found, or indeed expected, than a bare narrative; yet how keenly is he affected at any passages that contain any thing moving and interesting in its nature!

When we read, on the other hand, the most affecting part of the best written novels, even while the tears may flow, like those we shed at a pathetic tragedy, they wet our cheeks, it is true, but are quickly dried, while grief has not penetrated to our hearts.

The truth is, that unless we are convinced of the reality of what we read, or hear, the impression it makes is not sufficiently profound to be lasting. We may be struck with admiration at the beauties of invention; we may be charmed with some characters; we may feel an interest in the plot, that will not let us rest until we have seen how it ends: but when we are come to the conclusion, we treat the whole as an agreeable story well told, wherein the ingenuity of the writer has availed itself of those incidents, a lively representation of which must necessarily awaken the passions.

But allowing the utmost that can be said, still as belief is not moved, the heart is but slightly touched, and feels but transiently.—We lay down the book after perusal, as we rise from a play: in short, we are amused, but not affected enough to submit to any weight of concern on account of what we have been reading: we consider it in no other light, than as the birth of imagination and judgment blended together for our entertainment.

Such, on the contrary, is the force of truth, that, however plainly told, it sinks into our mind, as it were by its own weight, and without any collateral helps; we view it with a kind of respect; it commands our attention, and dwells upon our feelings.

It is entirely from facts that we regulate our notions of things. No person has yet thought proper to quote any passages from novels, as proofs of the rules and maxims to be observed in life. We draw them from purer sources; from well-known realities, and not from fictions, which, however ingenious, have not that solidity, in our apprehensions, on which alone we can safely erect a practical system of conduct.

When a writer sits down to frame the plan of a novel, the first idea that occurs, is that of pleasing the reader. To do this this effectually, he must consider what readers he has to please: the taste of these varies according to times and circumstances: these must be viewed with great nicety: a work that might prove acceptable at one period, may be rejected at another, merely from the changes that take place in the turns and dispositions of mankind. In order, therefore, to succeed, an author must consult all these peculiarities, and will of course rather study to make his work palatable than instructive.

But history proceeds on quite another plan. Truth, not mere probability, is the first law enjoined; without the observance of which, all other merit is lost. To instruct, is the principal view of the historian; to entertain, is only a secondary prospect. Unless they go hand in hand, he only performs part of his work, it is true; but we much sooner forgive him for being faulty in the second point, than in the first.

How many agreeable writers are neglected, merely for being suspected of embellishing their subjects at the expence of truth! how many are sought purely on account of their veracity; This consideration alone seems a sufficient answer to those who alledge the graces of stile, and the vivacity of genius, that animate novels, as contributing beyond all other causes to render them useful as well as pleasing.

Several individuals, it is true, cannot relish the most essential verities, unless they are delivered with some eclat; like vitiated stomachs that spurn at all food which is not highly seasoned. But these are not the proper judges of what is fit to be written or read. The majority of sensible people prefer plain truth expressed in clear and comprehensive language.

To persons of the first class above described, novels will of course be more acceptable than history. As they require accompaniments to the main object that should be proposed in reading, which is instruction, they will be gratified in a manner conformable to their inclination.

But to those who seek for substantial improvement, facts divested of embellishment will prove the most welcome subject of speculation.

One may dismiss this article, by observing, that the capital rules in a novel are, not only to make every part coincide with the other, sustain identity of character, and strike out variety without confusion, but, what is the main point and sine qua non of such writing, to arrive, through a succession of interesting adventure, to a conclusion fortunate to the principal personages, but long retarded by difficulties; the whole, in short, must excite surprize, and yet be accompanied with probability.

Who that considers this last and most essential rule, can avoid confessing, it is next to impossible to observe it without violating the strictness of truth? Strange adventures do sometimes happen; but never surely with that undiscontinued chain of marvellous circumstances, which even the most simply constructed novels seem to require.

But history demands no more than bare unadulterated truth, exposed with fullness and propriety, and supported by energy of thought, and elegance of expression. He that is able to compass these requisites, will always be read with satisfaction. To tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, is alike the law of history and that of a court of judicature. The observance of this law is more than half of the duties incumbent upon an historian: it is that which does him most honour, and helps to extenuate many blemishes: the integrity of his heart, and soundness of his head, are more valued than the brilliancy of his imagination, and the fertility of his invention. These proverbially belong to the composers of novels, and works of mere wit and fancy; which we may admire for their ingenuity and contrivance, but cannot, for the reasons alledged, class, in point of solid undiluted utility, with lessons that are drawn from the absolute facts and transactions of real life.

Lately, in the Dominican Convent at Rome, Dr. Charles O'Kelly, dean of the Caffanate College. He was a native of the county of Roscommon, and of an ancient and respectable family. On embracing a clerical life, he resigned his landed estate to his brother; whose daughter is married to O'Conor, the lineal descendant of Roderic, the last monarch. The death of Dean O'Kelly is regretted by all ranks at Rome, particularly by his own countrymen, whom he was ever ready to assist by his influence, his counfels, and generosity.

The following anecdotes do honour to the good sense and benevolence of the present amiable and excellent Bishop of Cork. His lordship, about fifteen years ago, when fellow of Emanuel College, Cambridge, wishing to try whether a servant educated under his own inspection would be more faithful and less dissipated than others, found, in a remote village in Dorsetshire, a farmer who was willing to let his son go to service. This boy, named William Shears, was then thirteen years old. The bishop instructed him in writing, accounts, and English reading; and, at the same time inculcated the principles of religion, humanity, and incorruptible integrity. Rising in life with the bishop's fortunes, he attended him to Ireland, was appointed seal-keeper in his diocese, and enabled to purchase a sinecure about the house of lords. He still continued butler in the bishop's family; and other favours were designed for him by his indulgent master; but a putrid fever hurried him away, in less than a week, from a wife he tenderly loved, and a master who had always treated him with the most marked confidence and regard. He died at his lordship's house in Hume-street. To those who know the value of a faithful servant, whose integrity and example are invaluable in a large family, these anecdotes will not be uninteresting.

BANKRUPTS—JAN. 1794.

Benjamin Pemberton, the younger, of the city of Dublin, builder, to surrender on the 20th and 31st of January instant, and 1st of March next, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

26.—Yesterday being the day appointed for the celebration of the anniversary of her Majesty's birth day, there was a levee at the castle, after which the following ode was performed in St. Patrick's Hall:—

RECITATIVE.

This annual tribute, gracious Queen,
The muse delights to pay,
And glories in the duteous strain,
That hails thy natal day.

CHORUS.

Imperial Charlotte, be it long thy fate
The splendour of Britannia's throne to share,
Relieve the burden of Majestic State,
And blend love's roses with the thorns
of care!

RECITATIVE.

Princes, too oft, by laws confin'd
Which love's ingenious choice restrain,
Alas! in wedlock are consign'd
As policy of state ordain.

AIR.

'Twas thine, Ch! favour'd maid to meet
A Monarch, in the bloom of youth,
In person, and in mind complete,
Worthy thy virtue, love and truth.

RECITATIVE.

Heav'n on the league propitious deign'd to shine,
And stamp'd thee parent of a noble line.

AIR.

To brighten thy maturer state,
Till higher blessings on thee wait;
In thy illustrious lineage Britons trace
The genuine fire of Brunfwick's warlike race,

AIR.

The mother's feelings half suppress'd
Within thy zeal impassion'd breast,
Thy royal Sons are freely giv'n
To wield the sword of righteous heav'n.

RECITATIVE.

For thee, Britannia, lo! for thee,
Domestic safety they forego,
To set afflicted thousands free,
And lay their fell destroyers low.

DUET.

For virtue, and for thee, thy brave
The various dangers of the war;
They dare destruction but to save,
And thirst for conquest but to spare.

FULL CHORUS.

Brethren, attend! and when they shall return,
Grudge not the meed, which gratitude
imparts,
But make their Royal Parents' bosoms burn
With the loud welcome of your honest hearts!

tract from Holinshed's Chronicles, in our last number; and wished for more from the same, relative to Ireland. We lay before them the following

Description of the principal Towns.

WATERFORD was founded by Sitaracus (as is aforesaid) in the yeere one hundred fiftie and five. Ptolome nameth it Manapia, but when he appropriated that name to this citie, neither doth he declare nor I ghesse. This citie is properlie builded, and verie well compact, somewhat close, by reason of their thicke buildings and narrow streets. The haven is passing good, by which the citizens through the intercourse of forren traffike in short space atteine to abundance of wealth. The soil about it is not at all of the best, by reason of which, the aire is not verie subtill, yea nathelesse the sharpnesse of their wittes seemeth to be nothing rebated or duld by reason of the grossnesse of the aire. For in good soothe the townesmen and namlie students are pregnant in conceiving, quick in taking, and sure in keeping. The citizens are verie heedie and warie in all their publike affaires, slow in the determining of matters of weight, loving to looke yer they leape. In choosing their magistrate, they respect not onlie his riches, but also they weigh his experience. And therefore they elect for their maior neither a rich man that is young, nor an old man that is poore. They are cheerfull in the entertainment of strangers, heartie one to another, nothing given to factions. They love no idle benchwhistlers, nor luskish faitors: for young and old are whollie addicēd to thriving, the men commōnlie to traflike, the women to spinning and carding. As they distill the best aquavita, so they spin the choicest rug in Ireland. A freend of mine being of late demurrant in London, and the weather by reason of an hard hoare frost being somewhat nipping, repaired to Paris garden, clad in one of these Waterford rugs. The mastifs had no sooner espied him, but deeming he had beene a beare would faine have baited him. And were it not that the dogs were partlie muzled and partlie chained, he doubted not, but that he should have been well tugd in this Irish rug; whereupon he solemniie vowed never to see beare baiting in anie such weed. The citie of Waterford hath continued to the crowne of England so loiall, that it is not found registered since the conquest to have beene distained with the smallest spot, or dusked with the least freckle of treason; notwithstanding the fundrie assaults of traitorous attempts: and therefore the citie arms are deckt with this golden word, Intacta manet: a poste as well to be heartilie followed, as greatlie admired of all true and loiall townes.

Limerike, called in Latine Limericum, was builded by Yuorus, as is before mentioned, about the yeeres one hundred fiftie and five. This citie coasteth on the sea, hard by the river Sennan, whereby are most notablie severed Mounster and Connaght: the Irish name this citie Loumneagh, and thereof in Englishe it is named Limericke. The towne is planted in an island, which plot in old time, before the building of the citie was stored with grasse. During which time it happened, that one of the Irish potentates, raising warre against another of his peers, incamped in that ile, having so great a troope of horsemen, as the horses eat up the grasse in foure and twentie houres, Whereupon for the notorious number of horses, the place is called Loum ne augh; that is, horse bare, or a place made bare and eaten up by horses. The verie maine sea is three score miles distant from the towne, and yet the river is so navigable, as a ship of two hundred tuns may saile to the keie of the citie. The river is termed in Irish Shauneamne, that is, the old river; for shaune is old, and amne is a river, deducted of the Latine word amnis. The building of Limerike is sumptuous and substantiall.

Corke, in Latin Coracium, or Corracium, the fourth citie of Ireland, happilie planted on the sea. Their haven is an haven roiall. On the land side they are incumbred with evill neighbors, the Irish outlaws, that they are faine to watch their descension of the charming dancers, who once more, in the course of the night, encored the whole of the performance of the ballet.

Dancing commenced at 11 o'clock, and at one the company were summoned to the supper-rooms, where elegance and plenty seemed to vie in the decoration of the festive-board, while wit, beauty, and all the gaiety and splendour of fashion enlivened the enchanting scene.

Dancing was resumed after supper, and the company separated with reluctance at six o'clock in the morning.

This ballet, which has given the stamp of fashion to the nouvelle introduction of Scots strathspeys, was got up under the direction of the celebrated Mrs Parker, whose elegant taste and finished stile of dancing, have justly attained so much eclat in the first circles in both kingdoms, and who has in reality proved an invaluable acquisition to this country in that elegant accomplishment.

WATERFORD—April 8.

The second division of the Tyrone militia marched into this city, on Saturday; and the remainder of the regiment arrived yesterday.

The inhabitants of this city, were in much consternation and alarm the whole of yesterday, in consequence of the appearance of riot and popular commotion.

On Saturday and Sunday, a rumour prevailed, that a mob purposed to assemble, in order to prevent all outward bound vessels, laden with grain, from prosecuting their voyages.

In consequence of a requisition from the civil magistrates to the commanding officer of the South Mayo regiment of militia, a strong detachment of that corps, and another of the Tyrone regiment (which had only arrived in town the day before) were called out at twelve o'clock on Sunday evening, and lay on their arms the whole night.

The mob, however, did not shew itself any way formidable, till eleven o'clock yesterday-morning, when a considerable number boarded, in lighters and boats, three different vessels which had failed, and were proceeding down the river, and stript two of them of their sails, which they carried off in triumph.

Thus far successful in their depredations, they next proceeded to the stores of Messrs. Cherry and Sykes, which they forced, and carried off, or wantonly destroyed a considerable quantity of oat-meal, &c.

We are extremely sorry to have occasion to observe, that Mr. Sykes, in attempting to remonstrate with the infatuated people, against their violating his property, received several blows; one with a stone, in particular, has considerably contused his cheek.

No other damage, we understand, has resulted from this very dangerous commotion, which, it is hoped, is now altogether over; and a subscription will doubtless be immediately opened, and a liberal contribution made to relieve the necessities of the indigent, and prevent them in future attempting to seek redress of alleged grievances by means so repugnant to the spirit of the law—so dangerous and unprofitable to themselves—so destructive of private property, and dreadful to the whole body of the citizens.

Our worthy mayor, animated with a principle of humanity that does honour to his feelings as a man, while he shewed himself extremely solicitous to protect persons and property, conducted himself with a degree of prudence and caution, that perhaps prevented more serious consequences.

5th.—A division consisting of 210 men of the 85th foot, a new regiment raised in Buckinghamshire, by col. Nugent, marched into Kilkenny on Monday se'night from Carlow—they were followed on Tuesday by another division of nearly the same number, and the remainder arrived here on Wednesday. The whole regiment is to be quartered there.

SLIGO, 15th April.

On Friday last came on at our affizes, the trial of William Nicholson, esq. for heading and abetting the insurgents in May last, and voluntarily taking unlawful oaths. The evidence produced against him was one Rusk, an approver, and who, in the course of his examination, was found to be a principal in the late disturbances in this county. This was corroborated by the evidence of a very respectable gentleman, who was in company with Mr. Nicholson on the day he was forced to join those deluded wretches. The jury, without quitting the box, gave their verdict—Not Guilty.

The hon. justice Boyd, who presided, then said, "Mr. Nicholson, you have been honourably acquitted, and the witness must be committed for perjury."

Saturday came on the trial of a number of those deluded wretches called defenders. The only person capitally convicted was one Kelly, who is to be executed at the fair-green, near this town, on Saturday the 26th inst.

Patrick Down, another of these deluded wretches, is to be whipped in the town of Collooney on Thursday next, and imprisoned one year.

On Sunday-morning their lordships proceeded from hence for Carrick-on-Shannon.

MULLINGAR—APRIL 19.

On Wednesday last Connor and Walpole were executed at Kinnegad, pursuant to their sentence at last affizes.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

DUBLIN—April 29.

YESTERDAY a clergyman, of the name of William Jackson, was committed to Newgate on a charge of sedition, under a warrant from the lord chief justice of the king's bench.

He was apprehended by Oliver Carleton, esq. high constable, and John Atkinson, esq. chief constable of police, who at the same time seized his writings, &c.

On Wednesday last the Rev. James Verchoyle, LL. B. was, at a very full chapter, unanimously elected dean of the cathedral church of St. Patrick, Dublin, on the resignation of the Rev. Robert Fowler, M. A. who is collated to the archdeaconry of Dublin, by his grace the archbishop of Dublin.

May 1.—Monday last the association for promoting the practice of religion and virtue held their annual examination of the candidates for premiums belonging to the several parochial schools of this city, at St. Werburgh's church. The candidates were in number between seventy and eighty; the whole of the children present about five hundred; the psalm, as usual, accompanied by a full organ, had a most pleasing effect.

Riot in the County of Cavan.

On Tuesday, the 12th of May, a most desperate affray happened at the fair of Kilmelack, near Cavan, the circumstances of which are thus stated in letters from that quarter:—

A number of persons, calling themselves defenders, having come to the fair, declared "they would destroy every Scotchman, or Presbyterian, they should find."—They met a Mr. Biggers, who had upon all occasions been forward in suppressing such lawless depredators, and having cut and abused him in a shocking manner, some humane people got him from the crowd, and concealed him from their fury. Word was immediately sent to Ballyjamesduff and the neighbourhood, when a Mr. Blakely assembled about forty of his neighbours, protestants and dissenters, and proceeded on their way to Kilmelack. They were met by the banditti within one mile of the town, who made a shew of opposition. Mr. Blakely, accompanied by some others, went to them, and stated, that they did not come with any hostile intent, but hearing of the treatment Mr. Biggers had received, they were determined to bring him home, dead or alive; upon which one of the leaders of the party made a stroke of a sword at Mr. Blakeley's head, which he defended with a blunderbuss, and had one of his fingers struck off, whereupon the fellow was shot dead. The insurgents immediately called on each other to surround Mr. B.'s party, which they attempted to do, but received so smart a reception, that after a short engagement they fled, leaving thirty-two of their companions dead on the spot.

But this defeat, far from reducing the Defenders to obedience, seems only to have inflamed their fury: for, on the morning of Thursday the 15th, several thousands of them assembled in the neighbourhood of Ballinaugh; the protestant inhabitants of which place, about a dozen families, immediately fled for refuge towards Ballyjamesduff, leaving their houses and property to the Defenders, who instantly took possession of them, and pursued the fugitives. They had not advanced far before they learned that several detachments from the royal regiment of Dublin militia were marching against them; upon which they changed their route, and falling back upon the estate of the bishop of Meath, plundered and destroyed the houses of his tenantry without distinction, burning whatever they could not carry off, and in particular committing to the flames the poor people's leases by which they held their lands.

They now returned to Ballinaugh, posting strong parties, well armed, on the hills, to annoy any who might pursue them.

By this time the men of Ballyjamesduff, the fugitives from Ballinaugh, and the Bishop's tenants, being rallied by Mr. Henry Maxwell, of Crover, put themselves under his command, and marched towards Ballinaugh, notwithstanding an incessant fire from the parties on the hills. On his march, Mr. Maxwell was joined by another party of protestants, under the command of Mr. Nixon; they arrived near Ballinaugh, and there there demanded of the Defenders the surrender of their arms and ammunition (which they had in abundance), and that they should quietly disperse themselves: they were answered by a heavy fire. In vain those spirited gentlemen and their brave followers attempted repeatedly to make some impression on the multitude of Defenders that opposed them: they must have relinquished the combat, had not, at the very moment that their ammunition was all spent, two parties of the royal regiment of Dublin militia appeared to support them: they were the grenadier and light infantry companies, commanded by capt. Medicott, having with him capt. O'Meara, lieutenant. Thwaites, and lieutenant. Richard Sankey. Their courage, steadiness, and excellent discipline, soon turned the scale of battle. The Defenders retired without much disorder, into the town of Ballinaugh, and from the houses kept up a continued fire upon the soldiers: with such a handful of troops there was but one way to dislodge the Defenders, and that way the magistrates directed to be taken, it was by burning the town to ashes; which was accomplished about two o'clock on Friday morning.

By this time a third party of the royal Dublin militia, under the command of ensign Hudson, had arrived from Balieborough, more than 20 miles; though they had exerted their utmost powers, they had not been able to participate in the honour of the engagement, but they had the good fortune to fall in with a party of the runaway Defenders, and, after a short conflict, took their leader and several others prisoners. On their leader they found some papers, containing the Defenders' oath, lists of his associates, and other matters not unimportant.

Colonel Alexander also, with a fourth party of the royal Dublin militia, arrived at Ballinaugh just as the business was finished. He had received an express at Cavan, that the parties he had sent out were likely to be overpowered; upon which he collected every remaining man, and putting himself at their head, hastened to captain Medicott's support.

It would be vain for us to attempt extolling the courage and conduct of the officers and men concerned in this affair—the applause and gratitude of their country, and the exultation of their fellow-citizens of Dublin, form their best eulogium.

Great praise is due to Mr. Cole, who, throughout this difficult and dangerous day's business, gave the best advice, and set the most honourable example to those concerned in quelling the insurrection.

We must not omit a little anecdote, which proves that true courage and humanity are ever found together:

After the Defenders were completely subdued at Ballinaugh, four of them crept out of one of the burning houses, throwing down their arms and crouching into a corner, begged for mercy; the enraged soldiers, smarting from their wounds, rushed upon them with the bayonet: capt. Medicott commanded them to desist, but without effect:—"If," says he, throwing his body upon the prostrate wretches, "you will kill them, you must kill me too."—He was too much the object of the soldiers' love and admiration to be longer disobeyed.

LITERARY INTELLIGENCE.

“ Plutarchi quæ supersunt omnia. Opera
 “ J. G. Hutton.” - 8vo. Tubinga, vols. 4 and 5, 17s. 4. Imported by Mercier and Co.

IN our 3d vol. p. 47, we announced this learned and valuable work, and have now the pleasure of informing our readers that two volumes more are just published. The fourth volume contains the lives of Sertorius, Eumenes, Agefilaus, Pompey, Alexander the Great, and Cæsar; the fifth, Phocion, Cato
 minor, Agis, Cleomenes, the Gracchi, Demosthenes, Cicero and Artaxerxes.

“ Icones Plantarum Rariorum Delineavit
 “ et Aere incidit Hen. Schewgman;

Tomus primus, Haarlem, 1793. Imported by Mercier and Co.

THIS is a very splendid work, and must be a beautiful addition to the library of every botanist. The plants are given of their natural size, and are exquisitely coloured; each fasciculus contains three figures, and the descriptions are in Latin, French, Dutch and German; amongst them we find the Limodorum Tankervillæ, Pitcairnia
Bromeliæfolia, Portlandia Grandiflora, and the Gloriosa Superba.

“ Plinck Icones Plantarum Medicinalium

 VOL. IV. July 1794.

“ dici Chirurgici atque Diatetici.” —
Imp. fol. 20 fasciculi, 5 vol. Vienna, 1793. Imported by Mercier and Co.

THIS is probably the most splendid and extensive work ever presented to the botanical world. Five volumes, containing five hundred plates, are now published; and the sixth volume will be soon finished; each fasciculus contains twenty-five plants, coloured with the greatest accuracy, and the descriptions are in Latin and German.

“ The Mysteries of Udolpho, a Romance,
 “ interspersed with some Pieces of Poe- “ try. By Ann Radcliffe.” 4 vols.
 12mo. 1794.

IT seldom happens in our sketch of the literature of the month, that we notice novels; there are but few that rise above mediocrity, and numbers fall still-born from the press: But the mysteries of Udolpho is of a very superior class; terror and pity prevail by turns, and both the head and the heart are interested in the course of the eventful story. In description, the fair Authoress excels, and portrays many scenes of nature, in a manner worthy the pen of Gilpin. Some fastidious readers may conceive that the work abounds too much with these; but to the lover of nature they come recommended with all the glow and embellishments of a vigorous imagination, aided by a cultivated taste. We are surpris'd at an error which repeatedly occurs, and which we hope

hope will be corrected in a future edition. Nuns and friars never inhabit the same building.

“ Critical Observations on the Design of “ the sixth Book of the Æneid,” 8vo. Reprinted 1794. 2s. 8½d.

THIS elegant work is from the pen of the late Mr. Gibbon, and was originally printed in 1770; the author's name was kept profoundly secret, and but few copies were printed. It was written to combat the opinion of Warburton, that the descent of Æneas to the shades contained only a figurative description of his initiation into the mysteries, particularly the Eleusinian. This idea is powerfully attacked by Mr. Gibbon; first, from the ignorance of Virgil, who not being one of the initiated himself, could not reveal what he did not know: and secondly, from his discretion, which would not permit him to divulge it. The book is beautifully and correctly printed, and must, in the opinion of every man of taste, deserve the eulogium of the learned Dr. Parr, who calls it “ a most clear, elegant, and decisive work of criticism, which could not, indeed, derive authority from the greatest name, but to which the greatest name might, with propriety, have been affixed.”

“ History of the County of Cumberland.
“ By William Hutchinson, F. A. S.
“ Author of the History of Durham.
4to. 2 vols. Two guineas and a half the finest paper; 2l. 8s. 9d. the second paper, and 2l. 3s. 4d. the cheapest. Jollie, Carlisle.

THE learned author of this curious work is already well known in the republic of letters, by his former productions in this line; and the present must add to his reputation. The situation of Cumberland between the two kingdoms before their union under one sovereign, often rendered it a prey to those marauders with which the Marches swarmed, and who for centuries carried on a predial war, which spread desolation and horror over the face of the country. This has occupied the attention of our historian in his introduction, which contains many curious particulars of the Border history. He describes the county by parishes; and along with many curious engravings of Roman and other antiquities, are some on wood, by the celebrated Bewick. The first volume only is published, but the second will follow.

“ The History of the principal Rivers of “ Great Britain.” vol. 1, folio, 312 pages and 46 coloured plates; five guineas; printed by Bulmer for the Boydells.

TO the family of the Boydells the fine arts in England are certainly much indebted. The present work is indeed a proof of their taste; and the Thames, as first in rank of the British rivers, first occupies their attention. The plan is highly deserving of public encouragement, and merits our approbation. Some of the descriptions are admirable, and the plates are most accurately executed. The account of the source of the Thames is, in particular, highly interesting.

“ Biographia Britannica,” second edition, vol. 5, a guinea and a half in sheets. Robinsons.

WE are pleased to announce the publication of another volume of this national work; whose progress must naturally be slow from the extensive range it embraces. Dr. Kippis, who has resumed the task of conducting it, has rendered this volume equally interesting with the preceding ones. It begins with the life of John Davis, the celebrated navigator, and ends with that of Sir John Fastolf.

August 16.

The South Mayo regiment, which has been quartered here for several months past, and whose proper and orderly conduct has procured it the esteem of the inhabitants at large, has received the route for Skibbereen Bay, &c. and the first division will march on Wednesday next.

The North Cork, it is said, will replace the Mayo.

A melancholy and lamented accident happened at Cowes, in the Isle of Wight, about eight o'clock on Friday morning last. A party from one of the transports, under convoy of the Nonfuch man of war and some gunboats, lying at anchor there, bound to Jersey, obtained permission to land, that they might take the benefit of sea-bathing from the shore.

Returning to their ship, the wind blowing strong from the north, and tide at ebb, the small boat in which they were not being more than fifteen feet long, overset, and unhappily sixteen soldiers of the 32d regiment, and two sailors, making a proportion of twenty-eight in number, who first left the vessel, were drowned. The others, with the greatest difficulty, were picked up by the assistance given from the boats in the harbour.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Our numerous mathematical friends must excuse us if many of their favours do not appear; to print all we receive would be impossible, and many tend to exercise, or rather tire ingenuity. Long ago we called their attention to those subjects to which alone we can devote a few pages. Important new discoveries, or improvement of old ones; rules for facilitating operose calculations, or elegant demonstrations of theorems, shall ever find a place:—but the fripperies of science, or personal attacks from those who want, by the medium of the Anthologia, to creep to notice, must be suppressed.

Some valuable papers have unfortunately been laid aside, but shall be sought for, and appear as soon as possible.

Mr. Creagh, junior's paper is under consideration.

The letter from his Holiness we conceive to be too personal.

Solian's Dissertation on Solitude—And W. W's imitation of Johnson, in our next.

Our friends would add much to the many obligations we are under to them, by discharging their arrears for the Anthologia.

Continuation of the Equality of Mankind in our next.

With much difficulty a few persons were procured to pursue the marauders, but as it happened, too late to be useful.

Mary Dobbin, a servant, had both her legs terribly scalded in Bull-alley with boiling water.

Margaret Dunn, a poor woman, was run over by a carriage in Park-street, by which she got a compound fractured arm.

William Gorman had one of his legs fractured in Thomas-street, by a fall off the flags.

Thomas Ellis, a boy of fourteen, standing on a car at Kiligobbin, one of the ropes had fastened about his leg, the other end of which got round the axletree, and by the motion of the car his leg was drawn down and encircled about the axletree, by which his leg was most dangerously fractured and torn to pieces.

They were received into Mercer's Hospital.

We are concerned to be informed, by letters from the county of Kerry, that Sir Barry Denny has fallen in a duel with John Crosbie, esq. having received the ball of his adversary's pistol in the forehead, which occasioned his death instantaneously. The dispute originated in some unfortunate misunderstanding connected with the election for the county, to represent which Mr. Crosbie was a candidate.

A fiddler of the name of Fitzpatrick, fell into a ditch at Rockbrook, about two miles beyond Rathfarnham, early on Sunday night, and was smothered. He had been playing for the amusement of company during the most part of the day, in a public house in the neighbourhood, and appeared to be somewhat intoxicated in the evening. When discovered, the dead body was brought on a car to some part of the vicinity of Dublin, where he had his place of abode.

Wednesday last near ninety thousand yards of linen cloth, and eight thousand yards of woollen, were entered outwards for New York.

OCTOBER 27.

On Saturday last being the anniversary of his Majesty's accession to the throne, a royal salute was fired on board the Rofs revenue cruiser, commanded by Captain Harman, then lying at Poolbeg. The exactness of time between each gun, although the cruiser only mounts ten, was much admired by a number of spectators then upon the new South wall.

OCTOBER 28.

Last night, Mr. Sheriff Manders and Powell went to a house in Back-lane, where a number of journeymen shoemakers had dined and were spending the evening, and there took four of them into custody, against whom charges of combination have been made, and lodged them in the New prison.

The alizes of the city of Cork has proved a maiden one.

Yesterday the body of a drowned man was taken up out of the Canal, near Rattinanes road. He was seen falling in, and though shortly after taken up, and brought to a house in Porto-cello, where he was bled, and other means tried for his recovery, all proved ineffectual. It appears he had been a young man.
