British Antarctic Territory

The British Antarctic Territory (BAT) is a sector of Antarctica claimed by the United Kingdom as one of its 14 British Overseas Territories, of which it is by far the largest by area. It comprises the region south of 60°S latitude and between longitudes 20°W and 80°W, forming a wedge shape that extends to the South Pole.

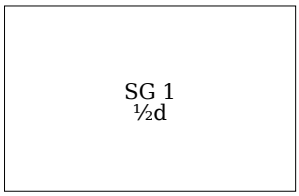

The Territory was formed on 3 March 1962, although the UK's claim to this portion of the Antarctic dates back to Letters Patent of 1908 and 1917. The area now covered by the Territory includes three regions which, before 1962, were administered as the Falkland Islands Dependencies: Graham Land, the South Orkney Islands, and the South Shetland Islands.

10th Anniversary of Convention on Antarctic Seal Conservation

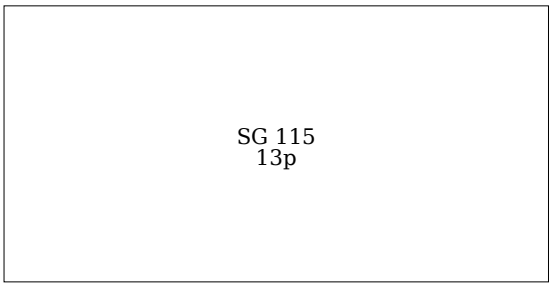

3 January 1983

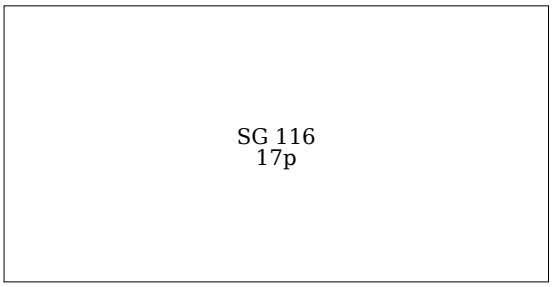

The Leopard Seal is the largest of all the ice-breeding seals which mates in the water. It is an aggressive animal which preys on the young of other seals and several species of penguin.

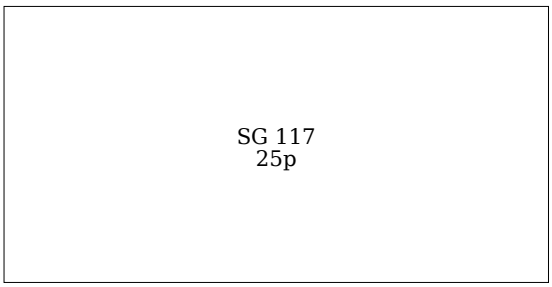

The Weddell Seal has evolved to make best use of stable fast-ice close inshore. It spends most of the winter under the ice, keeping breathing holes open with its teeth. Females haul out along tide cracks to give birth and spend 5 to 6 weeks suckling their young.

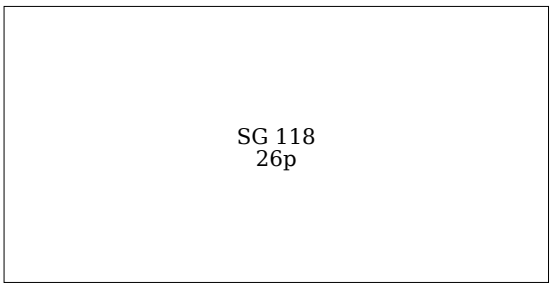

The Elephant Seal does not inhabit the Antarctic Continent, but is restricted to surrounding Subantarctic Islands.

Antarctic Fur Seals are not confined to Antarctica, but abound on South Georgia, where a colony of over 2 million exists, having recovered from near-extinction in the 19th Century. They swim with their large fore-flippers and have two coats.

The Ross Seal is the least known of the Antarctic seal species, and is confined to the pack ice of the Ross Sea. The population is thought to be around 220,000 and they feed mainly on squid.

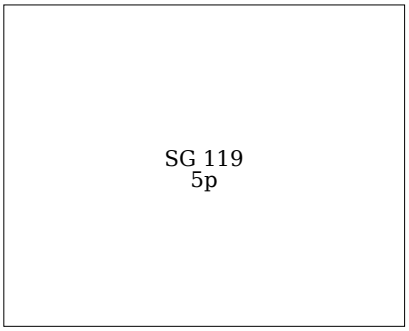

The Crabeater Seal is the most common in Antarctica, with a population of between 15 & 30 million. This figure is hard to confirm as it is confined to the pack ice.

Operation Tabarin was mounted in 1944 to strengthen Britain's legal title to its Antarctic territories. It soon developed to include the establishment of permanent manned bases which would provide platforms for scientific work, exploration, surveying and mapping of the local area. Operation Tabarin was replaced by the Falkland Islands Dependencies Survey (FIDS), which continued the British presence in Antarctica, creating fourteen more bases over subsequent decades.

The Scientific Committee on Antarctic Research (SCAR) is an inter-disciplinary committee of the International Council for Science (ICSU), and was created in 1958. SCAR is charged with initiating, developing and coordinating high quality international scientific research in the Antarctic region (including the Southern Ocean), and on the role of the Antarctic region in the Earth system. SCAR provides objective and independent scientific advice to the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meetings and other organizations such as the UNFCCC and IPCC on issues of science and conservation affecting the management of Antarctica and the Southern Ocean and on the role of the Antarctic region in the Earth system.

The Convention on the Conservation of Antarctic Marine Living Resources is part of the Antarctic Treaty System. The Convention was opened for signature on 1 August 1980 and entered into force on 7 April 1982 by the Commission for the Conservation of Antarctic Marine Living Resources, headquartered in Tasmania, Australia. The goal is to preserve marine life and environmental integrity in and near Antarctica.
