Papua and New Guinea

British New Guinea

1885 - 1906

The Territory of British New Guinea comprised the southeastern quarter of the island of New Guinea from 1883 to 1975. Britain controlled the South-East of the island of New Guinea since late 1884. The colony was administrated from Queensland, whose postage stamps figuring Queen Victoria were in use in British New Guinea between 1885 and 1901.On 1 July 1901, a stamp series was issued with the name of the colony BRITISH NEW GUINEA printed on it in intaglio by De La Rue in London. The design featured a photograph taken by Captain Barton, Secretary of the Lieutenant-General. It pictured a Lakatoi, a local ship, in front of Hanuabada village, near Port Moresby.

Resolutions of acceptance were passed by the Commonwealth Parliament, who accepted the territory under the name of 'Papua', which came into existance in 1902.

The territory of British New Guinea only poduced stamps in 1901 and were used up to 1906 after which they were produced under the name of 'Papua'

As previously mentioned, the region of British New Guinea changed it's name to Papua in 1902. At this time the territory was still utilsing surplus stamps under the name of British New Guinea until 1906. In 1906 the territory began using its own named stamps and did so until 1939.

The Lakatoi design remained unchanged until 1932, with only modifications of colours, watermarks and values. The sole change that was ill-welcomed by the public was the monocolor issue of 1911.

The Northern section of the Papua / New Guinea island was under control of Germany and when the first Post Offices opened in 1888 they used German Reich Stamps. In 1897 the name Deutsch Neu Guinea was over stamped and four years later replaced with unique Deutsch Neu Guinea stamps. The last issue of stamps was in 1914 and just prior to the outbreak of World War 1 when Australia invaded and took control over the region.

In September 1914, at the beginning of World War I in Europe, Australian troops invaded German New Guinea. In October and December 1914, the remaining stocks of German colonial stamps were overprinted with two legends. On the upper line, 'G.R.I.' for Georgius Rex Imperator in honour of George V, King of the United Kingdom. The lower line carried the new denomination expressed in Australian currency.

From January 1915 to 1925, stamps of Australia were used in New Guinea, overprinted 'NORTH WEST PACIFIC ISLANDS'. These were the Kangaroo and Map series and the George V series.

Territory of New Guinea

On 23 January 1925, the Australian administration under the League of Nations mandate of the Territory of New Guinea issued the first stamp series for this entity. The issue of stamps under the name Territory of New Guinea continued irregularly until 1942 with the Japanese attack on Rabaul in New Britain in January 1942 and the occupation of the rest of the territory. At this time all the civil administrations were quickly suspended.

After World War II, the combined Territory of Papua and New Guinea came into esistance and stamps of Australia were used until 1 March 1953. On 30 October 1952, the new combined territory received its new stamp series figuring local topics and bearing the name Papua and New Guinea. This continued until 26 January 1972, with the independence of Papua New Guinea and the introduction of their new currency, 100 Toea (T) to the Kina (K)
