Inverted Jenny Miniature Sheet

Scott C3a - the Inverted Jenny - was issued May 10, 1918. The image of the Curtis JN-4 airplane in the center of the design was accidentally printed up-side down. Only one pane of 100 stamps was ever found, making this the most famous (and arguably the most-sought-after) error in American philately.

In 2013, the USPS issued this miniature sheet of six stamps in a sealed envelope. The denomination was changed from 24 cents to $2 to prevent confusion with the 1918 issue. In direct violation of USPS policy forbidding the deliberate creation of philatelic errors, 100 of these sheets were deliberately re-inverted (the airplane is right-side up) and scattered to post offices across the country in the hopes that a hunting frenzy would occur, similar to that in 1918 after the original error was discovered.

Statue of Freedom

Includes intaglio printing plus a security element not previously seen on U.S. postage stamps. The numeric denominations on the $1, $2 and $5 Statue of Freedom stamps are printed with optically variable ink that appears to display different colors when the angle of viewing is altered.
